FOOD FOR THOUGHT

THE NEWSLETTER OF THE UNIVERSITY DISTRICT FOOD BANK

Record year for Food Bank auction!

There were lots of great items to bid on in the Silent Auction.

THANK YOU to all of our supporters and volunteers who made the 28th annual “Take a Bite Out of Hunger” benefit auction a record year!

We raised $406,000 including sponsorships, ticket sales, item sales and Fund-A-Need, which raised $240,000 towards our $1.2 million fiscal year food budget.

This is a victory and puts us on a solid path as we look toward our food budget next year. But even with the amount raised it’s all relative to our looming food purchases.

The auction celebrated the Food Bank’s 40th birthday and these folks were in the spirit of the evening.

Meet our Food Bank founders

As many of you know, the Food Bank has been celebrating 40 years in 2023. We’re so proud to have filled a void in the community and been able to feed our friends and neighbors in Northeast Seattle for four decades. You make it possible day-to-day for us to continue our work.

But we truly would not be here without three very special people who were the engine that made the University District Food Bank possible in 1983:

Patty Whisler – co-founder and community organizer

Dick Cunningham – co-founder and pastor at University Christian Church

Trish Twomey – first executive director

Read on for their reflections about the beginning and how they came to launch the University District Food Bank in 1983! (Interviews have been edited for length. Full interviews at www.udistrict-foodbank.org/udfb-blog/.)

► Patty Whisler How did you get involved with the Food Bank?

The timing was just remarkable. I can’t tell you what a glorious process it was

Letter From The Director

Dear Friends,

I'm writing you today to tell you about a significant change in one of our key partnerships.

Northwest Harvest has unilaterally decided to remove us as a food distribution partner by the end of 2024. While we will remain a member of the Northwest Harvest network and will collaborate with them on policy advocacy toward our shared goal of ending hunger, University District Food Bank is one of 30 agencies statewide and one of four in Seattle to be "graduated" from receiving food from them. Northwest Harvest has taken this decision in order to focus their food distribution on partners working "without the traditional resources offered in the food system."

We are deeply disappointed by this decision. To build a hunger free community, we must move beyond a narrative of scarcity. This decision by Northwest Harvest only reinforces that narrative.

2024 will be a year of transition for us with Northwest Harvest. They will reduce their food support by 25% in January and by 50% in July. The loss of this food is significant. The loss of this food will be noticed on our shelves.

Last fiscal year, Northwest Harvest provided us nearly $400,000 worth of in-kind food donations. (Their share of contributions are indicated by the red area in the adjacent pie chart.) Replacing this will be difficult, but replacing this will be essential. We remain busier than ever at our food pantries, we've seen the closure of the U-District Target (a food donation partner), we've added two schools to our Packs for Kids program, and our grab-and-go café stocked with ready to eat foods will open later this month.

Our commitment to building a hunger free Northeast Seattle remains unchanged. We know that in our community, food justice can seem out of reach for so many. We will continue our work to reduce and eliminate the barriers to food access. We will continue to provide healthy, culturally familiar food daily.

In our current fiscal year, we have doubled our food purchasing. We will spend $1.25M buying food and hygiene items to supplement our donations. This increase in purchasing realistically only helps us tread water. Through September, we were 47% busier than at this same point last year. We anticipate remaining at least this busy into 2024.

As you consider your end of year giving and make plans for 2024, please include University District Food Bank in your plans. Your investment locally has the biggest impact on the lives of our neighbors. Your investment helps us build a hunger free Northeast Seattle. Your investment in our community matters.

In peace,
Joe

to set up. Everything just fell into place and everyone wanted to help. The U District was filled with people who had no homes, no food, nowhere to go and we all came together to make the food bank happen.

Dick Cunningham was instrumental in getting the churches behind it and it felt like Trish Twomey appeared out of the blue and was so phenomenal, as was the University Christian Church community. Everyone should have an experience like this in their lifetime.

What was the biggest challenge to overcome in the beginning?

We didn't have any competition in the area, and everybody got right in there and did a wonderful job of helping. But in the beginning, initially, it was hard to get the space donated, but then University Christian Church stepped up and we were all so grateful.

What is your fondest memory of your time volunteering Food Bank?

The food drives that Trish organized. One time in particular, I remember her in the back of the truck putting everything together and surrounded by supplies. She had a huge smile on her face even though it was a lot of work. That is a memory I love.

Any other thoughts or memories you'd like our community to know?

The thing that made it go was that everyone sensed a greater need and the city was so helpful. People learned to trust each other and that was a wonderful thing to see grow as we headed into the next decade of community planning. Residents, businesses, faith community all working together made it far better. It's one thing we did that was a big success because we all came together.

This trust grew out of a common goal and it's what we need now to bring everyone together.

► Dick Cunningham

How long were you a pastor at University Christian Church?

Eighteen years. I managed education and social justice, which led to the Food Bank.

Was there a certain moment or series of events that lead you to co-found the Food Bank?

First thing is the dynamic of the members of the church, very progressive, and cared about what they did in the world. The senior pastor and my colleague, James Stockdale, was an advocate for the church being relevant to the broader University District community.

What was it like gathering the community together in the early days to donate or volunteer?

We had a space in the basement that used to be the church boiler room built in the early 1900s, so we said let's use this space. It had an outside entrance and alley access. People were very willing to engage in it and volunteer.

What was the biggest challenge to overcome in the beginning?

Where are we going to get the food from? The Church Council of Greater Seattle and the Washington Association of Churches operated out of our church. Boeing had had some bad days and people in the church rallied around that and realized in this country how can we let people go hungry? So it was engrained in our community already. Then Trish set up food drives at various churches and grocery stores and at the UW campus.

What's your proudest achievement during those years?

The church responded to the needs of people in the community, and that's my vision of what the church ought to be doing. Our church was concerned about what was happening today and how can we could help it. There was a line around the block at the Food Bank and you couldn't ignore it. The community saw the need and stepped up to help. The hunger issue is one that is very subtle because who wants to admit that they are hungry in a country with so much food?

Any other thoughts or memories you'd like our community to know?

Trish Twomey was the first executive director and was the most

Staff profile: Abby Herrick, Satellite Pantry Coordinator

Meet Abby, our Satellite Pantry Coordinator! They work tirelessly each week to make sure our North Seattle College and Magnuson Park pantries are stocked and staffed. These pantries are a vital resource to those neighborhoods and expands our reach further in the community.

All About Abby!

Hometown: Albuquerque, NM

First concert: New York Philharmonic?

Coffee or Tea: Coffee for sure, but I love a good London Fog.

Favorite Pizza Topping/s: Can't go wrong with Margherita.

Favorite Place to take out-of-towners in Seattle: The Bainbridge Island ferry

What is your school and work background?

I graduated from undergraduate at Whitman College in 2021 with a degree in music, and have worked with symphonies and music nonprofits in Washington and Albuquerque, New Mexico, as well as canvassing for Environment New Mexico and working at a Walla Walla Valley winery.

When did you start at University District Food Bank?

I started in October of 2022 through Americorps and recently became hired on as a full-time staff member.

What is your role within the organization?

I coordinate our two satellite pantries, at North Seattle College and Magnuson Park. These pantries allow us to feed more people in our community and those who can't make it to our U District location.

Abby Herrick likes to travel when she isn't working at the Food Bank.

What is the most fulfilling aspect of your work?

The most fulfilling aspect of my work is getting to see how people care for their community and being a part of this wonderful community!

What would you like our community to know about the Food Bank?

Since I started at the food bank a year ago, the number of people I serve at our satellite pantries has grown markedly, and we need more support than ever. But I also want to take a minute to thank all our volunteers and donors from the bottom of my heart. There is absolutely no way I could do my job without my weekly volunteers at both pantries and at the main food bank, and I am so grateful!

The University District Food Bank is an essential part of the U District, preventing hunger and serving our neighbors. The UW is proud to support this important work.

valuable employee that I have ever worked with. She was an excellent person to grasp the concept and move it forward.

Patty is a gem. She was phenomenal at bringing people together and organizing. These are two powerful women who need to be noted for their work in helping other people.

► Trish Twomey

What years were you Executive Director of the UDFB?

May of 1983 until summer 1993, about 10 years.

How did you get involved?

I was working at University Christian Church running the congregation meal plan and every month, Patty Whisler, who worked for the City of Seattle, held meetings with all service providers in the neighborhood. The closest food bank at the time was in Fremont and there was a growing need in northeast Seattle. So Patty started looking around at different churches and locations to operate out of. The University Christian Church was so large, they offered their basement space and it just started to grow organically from there.

What was it like gathering the community together in the early days to donate or volunteer?

Patty led this charge. She was a great community leader. She pulled together a board of directors with people from local churches, clubs, the UW and more. It was amazing to see the community come together. We'd get food from Food Lifeline and NW Harvest and were able to start feeding the neighborhood.

How many families a week did you serve?

We were busy right away and quickly became one of the busier locations in the city. KING5 News was there the first day we opened and we started serving maybe a couple hundred families a week. It grew later to 600 families.

What was the biggest challenge to overcome in the beginning?

The biggest challenge in the early days was getting enough food. I would often drive to NW Harvest to get more food because we were having a hard time keeping up with demand. About a year or two in we received funding from the City of Seattle. We got donations from local businesses in the neighborhood like Safeco Insurance and many others. We had moments of scarcity and then the money or food would appear and always worked out.

We started running a big campus food drive with all departments at UW, which was a huge amount of food. And the more people learned about what we were doing, donors would send in checks, service clubs were sending money. I don't remember being under-resourced after those first months.

How has food insecurity changed in Seattle over the last 40 years?

It's kind of the same story but in a different time. In the '80s we were seeing a lot of refugees from the former Soviet Union, and we're still seeing this and serving a large refugee population in our state.

There's a lot more attention paid to this issue now and new funding to support it. And, of course, the scale of the food banks now, with all staff members and larger shopping spaces, is much improved.

What is your fondest memory of your time as executive director?

It was always there to help people. I feel like we surprised people and were there to help them. People who came after hours to the church to get food, and I was happy to help them. People were always surprised and happy that we answered the phone, we really wanted to help people, we had resources and lots of food and always did what we could.

We are proud to support the University District Food Bank and the 2023 "Take a Bite Out of Hunger" Benefit Auction.

Grateful for your mission to end hunger in Northeast Seattle.
